

Applying the legislation

GUIDELINE - Right to Information Act 2009 and Information Privacy Act 2009 Checklist - what is personal information?

Who should use this Guideline?

This Guideline will assist anyone who needs to determine if information is or is not personal information.

What is personal information?

Personal information<sup>1</sup> is information or opinion...whether true or not, and whether recorded in a material form or not, about an individual whose identity is apparent, or can reasonably be ascertained, from the information or opinion.

What is the test for whether information is personal information?<sup>2</sup>

Determining if information is personal information involves a two step process. Step one is to decide if the information identifies an individual. Step two is to decide if the information is about the individual.

The checklist in appendix A is a guide developed to assist in applying this test. It is important to remember, however, that decisions about whether information is personal information should be made on a case by case basis in the circumstances and context specific to each situation.

For additional information and assistance please refer to the OIC Privacy Guidelines or contact the Enquiries Service on 07 3234 7373 or enquiries@oic.qld.gov.au.

This guide is introductory only, and deals with issues in a general way. It is not legal advice. Additional factors may be relevant in specific circumstances. For detailed guidance, legal advice should be sought.

If you have any comments or suggestions on the content of this document, please submit them to feedback@oic.qld.gov.au

Published 19 October 2011 and Last Updated 19 October 2011

Changes to legislation after the update date are not included in this document.

---

<sup>1</sup> Defined in section 12 of the Information Privacy Act 2009 (Qld).

<sup>2</sup> The test is set out in Mahoney v Ipswich City Council (Unreported, Queensland Information Commissioner, 17 June 2011).

APPENDIX A

Step One: Can an individual be identified from the information?

	Yes	No
Is the identity of an individual apparent from the information?

Note: Information which contains an individual's name will generally identify them. Even if a name is not present other information, such as a photograph or a detailed description, may also identify an individual.

If you answered yes to this question, go to the bottom of the page. If you answered no, continue to the next question.

	Yes	No
Is the individual's identity reasonably ascertainable ?

Note: Information can be personal information even if an individual's identity is not apparent, as long as their identity can be reasonably ascertained by reference to other information.<sup>3</sup>

Relevant factors in determining if identity is reasonably ascertainable can include:

- whether the additional information is reasonably available or would be difficult to obtain
- the number of steps required to link the identity of the individual with the additional information
- how certain the identification will be
- whether it will allow a specific individual to be identified or simply a group of people.<sup>4</sup>

If you answered NO to both of the questions above, the information is not personal information.

If you answered YES to either of the above questions, the information may be personal information. Continue to the second step.

<sup>3</sup> WL v La Trobe University [2005] VCAT 2592.

<sup>4</sup> Mahoney, page 4. Also see OIC Guideline What is personal information?

Step Two: Is the information about the individual?

	Yes	No
Is the information obviously about the individual?
Some information is very clearly about an individual – for example, an individual’s name, date of birth, medical or health information, bank account details or salary. Generally, the presence of an individual’s name in a document is sufficient to make it personal information.

If you answered yes to this question, please go to the bottom of the page. If you answered no, continue to the next question.

	Yes	No
Does the information reveal a fact or opinion about the individual?

Note: The answer to this question is directly related to the context in which the information is presented. When information is not obviously about an individual, it is necessary to consider whether the information reveals something about the individual.

Is there a sufficient link, or connection, between the information and the individual, to make it that individual’s personal information, for example, if the information reveals a fact about a thing—such as a business, an animal, or a piece of land—does that fact reveal a fact or opinion about the individual?

Examples:

- A report states that Council will resume the property at number 37 Mary Street to widen the intersection. This is personal information of the owner of 37 Mary St because it reveals a fact about the land—it is going to be resumed—which reveals a fact about the individual—they are going to lose their land.
- A file note states that Council is considering ten different locations for the placement of a new road, all of which would require land resumption. This is not personal information, as the fact about each piece of land—there is a possibility that the Council may at some future point decide to resume one or more of those ten properties—does not reveal a fact or opinion about the property owners, because the possibility of resumption does not have a sufficient connection with an individual.

If you answered NO to both of the questions above, the information is not personal information.

If you answered YES to either of the above questions, the information is personal information.