

Will there be a cost?

RTI applications may have a fee.

Additional charges may apply for processing the application and accessing documents e.g. searching and photocopying.

A Charges Estimate Notice will be provided to you by the agency if additional charges apply.

Documents containing your personal information are free if you request them to be sent by email or CD.

Ask the relevant agency about fees and charges prior to submitting your application.

Waiver of fees

If you hold a concession card you may apply for a waiver of processing and access charges. The application fee can not be waived.

How long will it take to process my application?

An application is generally processed within about five weeks or 25 business days, but this can be extended in some circumstances.

What if I don't have access to the internet?

Phone the relevant agency or the Queensland Government general enquiries line 13 QGOV (13 74 68).

Ask to be directed to an appropriate representative to see if the information you are looking for is already publicly available or if it can be released freely to you.

You can also contact your local library to see if you can access the internet there.

Need more information?

Customer services or RTI staff within the relevant agency may be able to assist you.

OIC also provides guidance about how the legislation operates through a range of guidelines and information sheets on the website www.oic.qld.gov.au

OIC's Enquiries Service (8:30am-4:30pm, Monday-Friday) can provide general advice about how to obtain information from Queensland government agencies.

HOW TO ACCESS GOVERNMENT HELD INFORMATION

A guide for the community

What is right to information?

The Right to Information Act 2009 (Qld) (RTI Act) require government agencies to make information available to the public unless there is a good reason not to.

Government information should, where possible, be available through informal means like an agency's website, publication scheme or through administrative release.

A formal application for government-held information under the RTI Act should only be made as a last resort.

The RTI Act promotes more open, transparent and accountable government

Which agencies can I access information from?

- Queensland government departments
- Ministers
- Local government (e.g. your local council)
- Government owned corporations (with some exceptions)
- Public hospitals and health services
- Public authorities
- Public universities

Where do I start?

Step 1

The first step is to think about the type of information you are looking for (e.g. Is it a report or email? What date was it created? Is there a reference number?).

Being specific will make it easier for both you and the relevant agency to find the desired information, and could reduce any fees you may need to pay.

Step 2

The next step is to see if the information is already available through the agency's website.

Government agencies are required to have a publication scheme, which may be on their website. Publication schemes detail what information is already publicly available including financial information, services, decisions, policies and priorities.

Websites may also contain information that has already been released under previous RTI applications. These will be listed on the agency's disclosure log.

Ministers generally do not have websites about the work they do in their role as a Minister. If you can't find the information you are looking for contact the Minister's office via www.parliament.qld.gov.au/members/current/list/current-ministers

If the information you want is not available online, you can contact the agency directly.

Provide agency staff with as much detail as you can about the information. This will help staff provide you with the best possible service and may also reduce any potential charges, if you need to make a formal application.

You should also ask if the information can be accessed through one of the agency's administrative access schemes.

This means you may be provided with the information without the need for a formal application under the RTI.

What if the agency won't give me access to the information I want?

If you cannot access the information informally, you can submit a formal application under the RTI Act.

Your application should be made to the relevant agency by submitting the form available at www.rti.qld.gov.au or apply online via the same website.

Alternatively, you can obtain a copy of the form from the relevant agency, or from OIC's Enquiries Service on (07) 3234 7373.
