The importance of truth through Aboriginal eyes.

The importance of information has never been greater and universally it is interpreted as the transparency and accountability of government. This is incredibly important given the amount of information and data that exists and continues to expand in the modern world. But what information matters, beyond the accepted situation, to Aboriginal people? What is the information unknown that Aboriginal people want to hear and need heard? In this talk, Ian will discuss truth telling and its implications for Australia as a nation and what benefits it brings us all, and also discuss the importance of knowing your own story through the eyes of the stolen children in trying to make sense of your life.
